

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

PREFACE.

The present volume includes the extant rolls of Exchequer, together with the corresponding portions of the Rentals of Crown Lands and of the Responde Books, which belong to the period from the accession of Queen Mary in 1557 to her abdication in 1567. There are only a few entries in the Rental Books for this period, and these take the shape of additions to the rentals drawn up in former years. The Responde Books are a complete series, and include, besides the usual record of the feudal dues exigible on the granting of sasines of the Crown Lands, a growing number of memoranda of commissions of justiciary, and, apparently drafted on the fly-leaves of the Books of Responde, a number of notes of proceedings in Exchequer, narrating the appearance of various debtors, who, with or without cautioners, became bound to the comptroller in legal form for the fulfilment of their obligations.¹

I.

The series of Exchequer Rolls, if those containing the comptrollers' accounts be excepted, is almost complete. There are rolls of accounts of the bailies ad extra for each year of the period covered by this volume, and of accounts of the customars and bailies of burghs for all these years except 1566. With regard to the comptrollers' accounts, the existing records do not include all that were rendered; while they also afford evidence that those which were given in were not given in regularly. Thus, there is no extant comptroller's account for 1557, and of that for 1558 only a short fragment remains.¹ There is a reference² to a comptroller's account rendered in 1559, but the account is not among the existing records. The account for 1560, on the other hand, is preserved in full.³ None are preserved for 1561 or 1562, but a reference in a later roll of bailies *ad extra*⁴ shows that accounts were given in in these years. The account for 1563 is preserved,⁵ and it bears that it was not rendered until 1567. There are no accounts for 1564 and 1565; and the accounts for 1566 and 1567, which are preserved, were not rendered until 1569. They have been included in this volume as belonging in substance to the earlier dates.

Owing to the paucity of the preserved comptrollers' accounts, to the fragmentary condition of one of them, and to an omission in another, it is impossible to ascertain from the rolls who were the auditors of Exchequer in any of the eleven years covered by this volume except 1567. In the account for 1560, the place usually occupied by the list of auditors has been left blank. The account for 1563, rendered in 1567, gives the list for the latter year. Those for 1566 and 1567, rendered in 1569, give the list for 1569. The succession of comptrollers, however, is ascertainable from the other rolls. Bartholomew Villemore, who was comptroller at the date at which the volume opens, continued to act until 1561.¹ In this year Thomas Graham of Boquhapple was also comptroller. Villemore and Graham received the payments for Whitsunday 1561,² and rendered a joint account³ before Martinmas of that year. Thereafter, until 1565, the comptroller was Sir John Wishart of Pitarrow⁴; and, finally, Sir William Murray of Tulibardin acted in 1566 and 1567.⁵ The accounts thus provide the evidence for correcting the date of 1563-4, given by Mr. David Laing⁶ as that of Sir William Murray's entry to the office of comptroller. The "change of the comptroller" referred to by the ministers of the reformed religion in their Supplication of October 1565⁷ as one of the reasons why their stipends had not been paid, was the change from Sir John Wishart to Sir William Murray.

II.

The leading event of the period covered by this volume was the Reformation, and the rolls illustrate in some particulars the effect which the establishment of Protestantism had upon the revenues of the Crown. It is usual to date the Reformation by the passing, on 25th August 1560, of the Act which approved of the Confession of Faith as wholesome and sound doctrine; but, two years before this, the Crown had already begun to profit by the downfall of the older form of religion, in so far as the payment of the eleemosynary grants charged upon the customs or the burgh mails ceased with the destruction or abandonment of the religious houses occupied by the various orders of Friars.

A typical example of these grants, the various payments of which have hitherto formed a familiar item in the accounts of the custumars and bailies of burghs, is the annual granted by King Robert the Bruce to the Friars Preachers of Perth, and charged upon the burgh fermes of Perth and the customs of Perth and Dundee. As the charter conferring the annual bears,¹ the grant was made by the king "for the salvation of his soul and for the salvation of the souls of all his predecessors and successors," and the annual was to be paid "in perpetuity." The payments, as the prior volumes of the Exchequer Rolls show, were made each term to the Friars by the bailies and custumars concerned, and accounted for yearly in Exchequer. There were, doubtless, irregularities in the payments from time to time; and there is evidence of a delay in regard to one of the payments covered by the records printed in this volume. Among the papers preserved along with the Chartulary of the Friars, there is a precept by which the comptroller, Villemore, writing in July 1557, orders Patrick Lyon, the custumar of Dundee, to make the Friars "thankfull payment in all gudly haist of this last term bigane of thair yeirly pensioun, and lykwise at all termis to come, without ony impediment." The writ, as printed by Dr. Mylne,¹ has two dates, one in figures, "6 July 1559," and one in words, "the vj day of July, in the year of God j^mv^c fyfty and sevyne yeirs." Villemore, as has been seen, was comptroller for both of these years, and in both of them Patrick Lyon was custumar of Dundee;² but, as Lyon's account for 1557 records the payment for Whitsunday, and his account for 1559 does not, it seems clear that the true date of the precept is 1557. The document shows that there was no intention then on the part of the Crown to stop the payment, and in fact the payment continued to be made until, on 11th May 1559, John Knox delivered in Perth the discourse which excited the reformers to the destruction of the houses of the Friars.¹ A right to an annuity, conferred by a royal charter, is not a corporeal thing, subject naturally to demolition, like the buildings against which Knox inveighed as great edifications and monuments of idolatry; but the new doctrine was ultimately as effectual in extinguishing the perpetual alms bestowed by the Crown on the Friars as it was in breaking down the stone images. It was probably a direct consequence of Knox's sermon that the Friars Preachers of Perth received no payment for Whitsunday 1559 from the custumar of Dundee; for, though his account was rendered in September 1559, and so included that term's transactions, it records only the payment for the preceding Martinmas.² His account suggests the reflection that, had Knox's discourse been delayed for a week, another payment would have appeared among its items. The custumar of Perth, on the other hand, made the payment for Whitsunday 1559, as usual;³ while the bailies of Perth followed the cautious example of the custumar of Dundee, and made their last payment to the Friars at Martinmas 1558.⁴ The annuities payable to other religious houses from other burghs met with a similar extinction by stoppage, and the position of them all was legally regularised by an Act of the Queen and Council, made in February 1561, which provided, "that all annuals, maills, and duties within free burghs and other towns of this realm, as well pertaining to chaplainries, prebendaries, as to Friars, together with the rents of the Friars' lands, wherever they be, setting and disponing thereupon, be intromitted with and taken up by sic as her Grace shall depute thereto, for employing of the same by her Highness to hospitalities, schools, and other godly uses, as shall seem best to her Highness, by the advice of her Council."¹

It appears from the comptroller's account of 1566² that, in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, payment of the annuity formerly granted to the Friars Preachers of Perth from the burgh fermes was in that year taken by a "collector within the bounds of the Sheriffdom of Perth." The changed position of the annuity is shown by the fact that it is now charged, not against the bailies of the burgh, as before, but against the comptroller. It is no longer the property of the Friars, but belongs to the Queen. A similar instance is found in a precept under Queen Mary's hand, dated 28th March 1566, addressed to the bailies of Aberdeen, and ordering them to pay Captain Hugh Lauder the £24 formerly paid to the Black and White Friars.³ The account of the bailies of Aberdeen for 1566 is in its place in the rolls,⁴ and shows that the precept was not executed by the bailies although addressed to them. The comptroller, however, made the payment to which the precept refers, as appears from the entry in his account for 1566,¹ "£24 from the burgh fermes of Aberdeen, paid to Hugh Lauder, by warrant of the Queen, and by her precept."

It is sufficiently plain that the cessation of the payments to the Friars was not a measure of fiscal policy designed by the Queen's advisers, notwithstanding the fact that these advisers were busied in planning such measures at the time when the Friars' annuals were legally attached to the Crown. A memorial embodying various proposals "whereby the rents of the Queen's Grace Crown may be augmented without grudge, hurt, or feeling of the people" was drawn up in 1561;² but this document takes no account of the extinction of the eleemosynary grants hitherto made to the Friars. It contemplated the continuance of the earlier religious establishment, and suggested, among other things, that the clergy should contribute "the twentieth penny" for administration and national defence, and that householders who did not attend Divine Service on Sundays and Saints' days should be made to "offer"—the proceeds of the offerings to go to the Crown. In the event, a larger contribution was to be exacted from the older

clergy by a measure not contemplated by the memorial, the appropriation of the Thirds of Benefices.

In December 1561 a convention was held at which the Queen, the lords of Council, and representatives of the "estate ecclesiastical" were present; and, after an offer by the leading prelates of a fourth of their benefices, it was decreed that a fourth, or, if that portion should prove insufficient, a third, of all the ecclesiastical benefices in the kingdom should be given over by the clergy to maintain the ministers of the reformed religion and to support the Queen "to entertain and set forward the common affairs of the country." The holders of benefices were ordered to produce their rentals before February next, so that the amounts of the several contributions might be exactly ascertained. They neglected, in all but a few cases, to do so, and an Act was passed in February 1561-2 providing that factors should be appointed to collect the rents of those benefices of which the rentals had not been produced. Another Act, passed soon afterwards, provided that the fruits of benefices of which rentals had been produced should be taken up by nominees of the Queen. These enactments, the history no less than the nature of which shows them to have been vexatious to the Roman churchmen, proved scarcely more satisfactory to the reformers. A collector was appointed to ingather the Thirds, and the comptroller—Wishart of Pitarrow—was to pay the stipends to the Protestant ministers. Wishart rendered separate accounts as comptroller and as collector of Thirds, so that his comptroller's account for 1563 bears no trace of any payment to the ministers. It is known, for the rest, from other sources that the ministers were not able to obtain payment from the comptroller of stipends, which, as Knox complains, were modified at an amount too small to keep their recipients alive. Wishart's remissness in this respect gave rise among the reformers to a "dicton and proverb," the theological exasperation of which no doubt found an echo in the feelings of the Roman clergy as well. "The good Laird of Pitarrow," it was said, "is an earnest professor of Christ, but the muckle Devil receive the comptroller, for he and his collectors are become greedy factors."¹

Some entries in the comptroller's account for 1566 furnish illustrations of the way in which the measure was carried out. It is to be noted that they relate only to such payments as were chargeable on the Crown Lands. Thus, the two chaplains in St. Ninian's Church, near Stirling, drew an annualrent from the lands of Stirlingshire, the payment of which is duly charged in the chamberlain's accounts for 1557 and 1558,² and would probably have been found charged in the accounts for 1559 and 1560, had these appeared in the rolls. The remaining Stirlingshire accounts in the volume¹ show that the chamberlain discontinued these payments from 1561 onwards. But in 1566 the comptroller makes the payment to one of the chaplains, Alexander Chalmer, "because the said Master Alexander found caution to the comptroller for the payment of the third part of the said annualrent." The other chaplain, Sir John Stevinstoun, has not found caution, and accordingly receives payment of only two-thirds of the full amount. The chaplain of the Chapel Royal of Stirling, Sir William Younger, receives payment in full, on the ground that "the Queen has remitted their Thirds of Benefices to the chaplains of the said chapel."² Similar entries in the 1567 account show that the same payments were also made by the comptroller in that year.³

III.

The course of the business of Exchequer was, as might have been expected, disturbed by the political troubles of the period of the present volume. The most noticeable irregularity to which the rolls bear witness is the delay in the auditing of the comptroller's accounts for 1566 and 1567. These accounts should, in ordinary course, have been heard and passed, each at the close of the year to which it refers. But neither was disposed of until 1569, when both were audited by a court commissioned by the Earl of

Murray as Regent. The accounts themselves supplement the remaining records of the time in explaining this delay, and in adding some particulars to the evidence bearing on an obscure but not unimportant incident in the history of the Chekker House—the presence of the Queen there and her relations with Bothwell during the lifetime of her husband.

Among the most specific and circumstantial of the charges made by the accusers of Queen Mary in the proceedings before the English Privy Council in 1568 was the allegation that she was in guilty relations with Bothwell in September 1566 during a visit to the Exchequer. The Book of Articles produced in England narrates that Bothwell had continual access to her at that time and that her demeanour towards him there exhibited every familiarity.¹ Buchanan, in his "Detection," enlarges upon this charge, giving particulars of the affair which need not be repeated here, and noting some interesting points about the Chekker House itself, his language apparently indicating that in 1566 the court was held in a different building from that which it occupied at the time he wrote. The "Detection" was first published in 1571. "When she was returned to Edinburgh," says Buchanan,² "she took not her lodging in her own palace, but in a private house next adjoining to John Balfour's. Thence she removed to another house, where the yearly Court whilk they call the Exchequer was then kept; for this hous was large and had plesand gardines to it, and next to the garden altogether a solitary vacant room."

The accounts of the bailies ad extra and of the bailies of burghs for 1566 show that the Exchequer was being held in that year from August to October;¹ and the fact that Queen Mary was present at the court during this time is borne out by a passage in the English State Papers from a letter by Sir John Forster to Cecil. Writing on the 8th of September, Forster says that the Queen came to Edinburgh on the 6th, and afterwards adds, "The Queen's coming to Edinburgh at this time is to sit in her Exchequer to understand her revenues, and to appoint what shall be for the keeping of her house and the young prince's."²

It is accordingly remarkable, in view of the nature of the charge made against the Queen, both that the comptroller's accounts were not passed—for the sovereign's presence might be expected to occasion a certain punctiliousness in the transaction of the business—and that the record of the comptroller's accounts for this year and the next does not remain in what was probably their original form, the older and hitherto usual form of a parchment roll. A fragment of such a roll, containing part of the account for 1566, and a fragment of another, containing part of the account for 1567, do exist, to show that the accounts were once extended in this shape.¹ But the accounts as we have them are preserved in a book apparently not written before 1569. It is possible to surmise that the rolls of which fragments remain were drawn up earlier, and may have contained some notice of the Queen's presence in the Exchequer, but those parts of the rolls to which one would look for notice of such a fact—that is, in the list of those before whom the accounts were rendered—do not remain; and, in what does remain of them, they coincide with the manuscript in book form.

The comptroller's account for 1566 covers the expenses for the year down to November, yet there is nothing in it to show that any extraordinary payment was made for expenses during the Queen's residence in the Exchequer House. On the other hand, the account for 1567 contains an entry for expenses exactly of this kind. It runs as follows:—"£1211 12s. 2½d. for the expenses made by the accountant in the Exchequer House, by (per) the auditors of the same, the Queen being there and several other nobles along with her at different times, in wine, bread, beer, flesh, fish, spicery, plate, and other divers necessary expenses concerning the providing of the Exchequer House in the months of January and

February 1566-7."¹ The entry is couched in a somewhat obscure phraseology, but it is possible to interpret it as referring to the charges for provisions during the Queen's stay at the Exchequer House in September 1566, and as meaning that the payment of these was not made by the comptroller until the months of January and February following. This interpretation is all the more probable because it was an uncommon thing for the Exchequer to meet in January or February for the despatch of business.

It is otherwise clear that the comptroller himself was, at the time of Queen Mary's downfall, anxious about the position of his accounts. In order to understand the significance of the manner in which the accounts ultimately came to be disposed of, it is instructive to review the main facts illustrative of the comptroller's attitude towards the Queen and Bothwell.

Prior to the murder of Darnley, Sir William Murray of Tulibardin appears in the references of contemporary writers merely as one of the great officers of the Crown, engaged in the ordinary duties of his office. It is relevant in this connection to note that the Book of Articles embodying the charges against Queen Mary narrates that, some time after October 1566, the Queen and Bothwell travelled from the Merse together, first to Drummond Castle and then to Tulibardin. "In what order," the Book goes on to say,² "they were

After the murder of Darnley (10th February 1567), however, Sir William Murray became a prominent opponent of Bothwell and the Queen. His brother, James Murray, was on 14th March 1567 proclaimed guilty of treason for having "devised, invented, and caused to be set up certain paynted papers upon the Tolbooth door of Edinburgh, tending to her Majesty's defamation and slander."¹ At Carbery Hill, Sir William and his brother were with the lords against the Queen and Bothwell. When Bothwell issued his challenge to decide the matters in dispute by single combat, it was James Murray who first accepted it. When his acceptance was rejected on the ground that he was Bothwell's inferior in rank, Tulibardin himself offered to fight the Earl, but his offer was also rejected, on the ground that he was not a peer.² When Bothwell finally escaped from Scotland, Tulibardin was appointed one of the leaders of the naval expedition sent out to pursue and, if possible, capture and try him.³ We learn, too, from the narrative of Queen Mary's French secretary, Claude Nau, that Tulibardin was one of those who visited the Queen on business of State while she was enclosed in Lochleven Castle.

This being the state of the comptroller's relations with the Queen, it need not be matter of surprise to find that his accounts for 1566 and 1567 were disposed of by a document otherwise uncommon—a royal exoneration and discharge, general and complete in the relief which it gives from the obligation to account, but special and peculiar in its terms and circumstances.

The deed proceeds upon the narrative that, before his entry to the offices of comptroller and collector, Sir William Murray had advanced to the Queen in her great need the sum of eight thousand pounds, and that since that time he had superexpended in the Queen's affairs much more than the whole income both of the collectory and of the Crown property could extend to—about eighteen thousand pounds. It refers to the "estate of the present time, wherein his comptis apperandlie (sc. obviously) are not to be haistilie herd," and has regard to the consideration that "gif he sall inlaik and be callit upoun the plesour of God befor the hering thairof, his bairns, being young, are not able to discharge so weighty a compt, wherethrough his hale heritage may be endangered to the utter subversion of his house." Then it goes on, bearing in mind the comptroller's "good service and benevolent mind" to the Queen, to discharge him of all his intromissions with the Crown property; and, further, absolves "the lords of our privy council and session, advocates, comptrollers, justices, justice-clerks, and all other judges and officers of our realm, present and to come, and their deputes, from all causing or compelling him to make account, or from proceeding against him in any way." It is signed by Queen Mary at Lochleven on the 16th of July 1567, nine days before the date of her abdication.

In spite of this royal dispensation, the existing accounts were rendered, and heard in 1569 before a court commissioned by the Regent Murray. In respect of the discharge the court remitted to the accountant the large balances brought out in the accounts as due by him to the Crown. It may be doubted, however, whether any of the auditors regarded the exoneration as in any but a formal sense the deed of Queen Mary. It was executed by her when she was, to all intents and purposes, a prisoner; and the terms of the narrative on which it proceeds suggest with some force that it is the deed of the grantee rather than that of the granter. There are two entries in the second account which it covers that emphasise the situation. In one the comptroller takes payment of an extraordinary allowance of £732, granted him over and above his salary by the Queen's warrant and by her precept.¹ In the other he takes credit for £450 18s. 6d. for a payment made to Patrick, Lord Lindsay of Byres, and several other persons, for the maintenance of the Queen at Lochleven,
